If you go back to the top of the pier where Undyne throws spears at you until you have a fun value as high as 90, you'll find the Goner Kid, a slightly modified version of the sprite Monster Kid. The last sprite is a GC facing upwards; they have two lines on the back of their head. Goner Kid asks you about a world where everything is the same except that you don't exist. Everything functions exactly the same without you. If you go back to them with an umbrella, they comment that it's not raining, but laughing and saying that makes them feel a little better. (Just speculation on my part, but it may be because even if there is no purpose for the umbrella, you still decide to hold it. After that, they tell you to forget about them. VIEWS: 2130AGE: 54 MONTHS PIXEL ART GALLERY PIXEL ART SUBREDDIT ... man, I have to really go home... Yo! You're a child too, aren't you? I can tell you because you're wearing a striped shirt. Talking to Monster Kid in Snowdin Monster Kid is a young monster who stops at nothing, see your idol, Undyne, in action. The contents of the show profile Monster Kid appearance is yellow, reptile monster without weapons, weapons, and spikes on the back of his head. Without weapons and often running everywhere, they often fall and fall. They have markings under their eyes, suggested that black eyes fall. One of the marks is bigger than the other. They wear a yellow shirt with brown stripes. The Monster Kid personality looks to Undyne as a role model. They are an innocent monster who adopts an energetic attitude that permeates most of their actions. They seem a little naive and also a little clumsy, as they often huddle. They also use words such as 'mon, dude, and yo are often generally considered childish ways of interacting. Despite the fact that the main character visibly scares Monster Kid during the Genocide Route (as soon as they discover the intentions of the main character), they stand up to the main character with intense expression, ready to defend the underground, trying to act as Undyne. The choice to rid them interrupts the Genocide Route, and Monster Kid's view of the main character returns to a more favorable state, showing a rather forgiving character. The main story of the neutral route Monster Kid first meets the main character in Snowdeen. They note how they both wear striped shirts, so they both have to be children. However, they do not seem to notice that the main character is a human child. Later they slip out of Snowdeen to explore the waterfall, looking for Undyne. They follow the main character without knowing that the last person Undin is looking for, and they feel a little jealous of the attention that the main character gets from her. Friske and Monster Kid overlooking the castle while walking on the bridge, Monster Kid learns that the main character is a man and reluctantly considers the main character the enemy. They try to say something mean to a person in an attempt to become enemies, but feel bad for him and start to leave. Just like Monster Kid leaves, they travel over the edge of the bridge and hang with it (presumably with teeth) as Undyne approaches. The main character must make a choice: help them rise back: Monster Kid protects the main character from Undyne, who retreats. They decide to stay friends with the main character and go home. Let them fall: Undyne dives down after the Monster Kid to save them. She is badly injured, but refuses to rest. They then tell Undyne that she was right about a man who was just standing there waiting for them to fall. This answer makes Monster Kid hate the main character. Run to Undyne: Undyne rescues the Monster Kid and is badly hurt. They tell Nundine that she was right about a man who was too willing to fight her to bother saving them. This answer also makes Monster Kid hate the main character. Run away from Undyne: Undyne helps Monster Kid up, who tells her that the main character was just going to get help from others. True Pacifist Route Monster Kid is seen cheering the main character on winning the bottom right corner of the battle screen as they with Flowey. In the epilogue they can be found in If saved earlier, they say that they do not think Undyne is that great anymore, and that they turned out to be a new idol, probably papyrus. However, if the main character does not save them, they are still angry with them for not saving them. They are also seen during the credits of attending Toriel School. Genocide Route Despite Undyne's warning that the main character hurts a lot of people, Monster Kid approaches the main character in disbelief. The main character turns away, and as The Monster Kid questions the main character about not answering them, the main character silently approaches them with a strange expression, forcing them to take a step back. Monster Kid begins to panic and wonders what to do, and then stands before the main character in desperation, trying to behave like Ndin, nervously stating that if the main character wants to continue to hurt others, the main character will have to go through them. The main character is then actively involved in a battle with them, with the narrative simply stating: On my way. If the main character dies, reboots on an unnamed save up the bridge and returns to that location without the player closing the game, they just try to trick the child into turning the other way before re-engaging. This meeting cannot be avoided. Monster Kid in shock if the main character attacks Monster Kid. Undyne takes a fatal blow in their place. The kid escapes, hiding a shocked expression, and the main character fights with Undyne the Undying. Monster Kid not seen again for the rest of the game; they are believed to have been evacuated along with others. If the main character spares The Monster Kid, they say they knew that the main character was not so bad and leave. This action interrupts the Genocide Route, and the main character fights Undyne later in the Falls usually. A slow-motion version of Anticipation is played during the battle. If the game restarts after this cutscene, the scene is shortened: after the Monster Kid approaches the main character, the main character tricks them into turning the other way and then re-engages in battle. For what (Engage Battle) Post-introduction, subsequent resets In the text Battle Flavor looks like a free EXP. Check Monster Kid quivers anxiously. (Neutral) On my way. (Meeting) I don't hee the Monster Kid Gallery in Tarot Cards like Major Arcana 19th, The Sun. Monster Kid as seen behind Undyne Immortal on her tarot card. Trivia Monster Kid was developed by Magnolia Porter, creator of Monster Pulse. She also developed Snowdrake, Ice Cap, Jerry, and helped develop Gyftrot. Pokemon Scraggy may be the inspiration for Monster Kid design; both small, yellow, bipedal lizards are like creatures with protruding teeth. Although Scraggy may have weapons, it must use them constantly to hold up its skin, which is very similar to not having a weapon at all, just like the Monster Kid. The assumption of Monster Kid that the main character is a child because of their striped shirt may be a reference to the Mother series, where the main characters of each game are children who wear striped shirts. Monster Kid can be seen behind the head of Undyne Immortal in the Immortal Tarot Card. In Japanese translation, Monster Kid uses ore for itself, which is commonly used for males. Monster Kid was named a man in Undertale Art Book; however, that decision had been changed in terms of the use of a gender-neutral term.
